There's something about a wooden floor; it can transport you in time, back to colonial tea bungalows of eastern India or an evening by the fireplace in a Swiss chalet. Mikasa's new collection of artistic wood flooring—sourced from the far corners of the world—works with a range of styles, from the quaint to the contemporary, infusing your space with a feeling that's home. "The name Mikasa draws inspiration from the Spanish phrase 'mi casa es su casa', which means 'my home is your home,'" says Parul Mittal, director of Greenlam, the parent company of Mikasa. The brand was launched in

The new collection has three distinct series, Pristine, Arbor and Atmos, with over 100 different floor variants in a colour palette that includes blonde hues, rich greys and dark espressos, in satin and matt finishes. From African sapele to Brazilian lapacho (walnut), and South American jatoba (cherry) to Canadian maple, the woods in the world of Mikasa, clearly have no boundaries. ♦
