Wood exudes abundance and luxury in flooring. It lends an earthy feel and refined taste along with a sense of luxury. It is extremely easy to install, remove and maintain, making it irresistible.

Endurance, design and appeal work simultaneously while deciding the flooring for your home. Yet, a number of questions bother you even after you have clinched and finalised on a specific type and finish. The presence of wood naturally brings in a sense of warmth and cosiness into the interiors of a house. Deciding on the right colour, texture and pattern of the wood is in fact a big decision. “Engineered wood is the most preferred option these days, as it is more versatile, resistant to temperature changes, deals with moisture a bit better, and also is super easy to install. The quality of wood should also be of top priority. Oak, maple, and walnut are known for their strength and durability,” suggests Akash Saini, Director, Notion Flooring.

There are more than just a few qualities to wooden flooring than meets the eye. “Wood exudes abundance and luxury in flooring. It lends an earthy feel and refined taste along with a sense of luxury. It is extremely easy to install, remove and maintain, making it irresistible,” says Abhishek Saraf, Joint Managing Director, Square Foot. From highly functional kitchen areas, bedrooms, foyers to supremely active kids room, each area of your home requires special attention and strategy while implementing the floor design plan. “Each room will require a flooring type with suitable, and often very different properties. Bathroom flooring, for example, should be able to tolerate high humidity levels. If you are laying flooring in different rooms or doing the entire house, you will need to choose a type of wood that will work in all the rooms,” informs Suresh Kumar Mansukhani, Country Manager, Indian subcontinent, Junckers. While opting for different kinds of wood laminates, do keep in
